

HighLights:

The dollar was little changed near 10-week highs against other major counterparts in quiet trade on Monday, as hopes for a December rate hike by the Federal Reserve still lent support to the greenback, while geopolitical concerns weighed.

The Turkish lira remained sharply lower against the U.S. dollar on Monday but was off the weakest levels of the session as a brewing diplomatic crisis between the U.S. and Turkey escalated.

The dollar held steady against a basket of the other major currencies on Monday as fresh worries over geopolitical risks helped underpin demand for the safe haven yen.

The dollar turned lower on Friday following reports that North Korea is preparing to test a long-range missile that it is believed could reach the west coast of the U.S.

The New Zealand dollar was trading near four month lows, with NZD/USD last at 0.7075 as political uncertainty in the wake of last month's elections continued to weigh.

British labor costs have been growing more strongly than previously announced, the country's statistics office said on Monday, adding to the case for a first interest rate hike by the Bank of England.

Investor sentiment in the euro zone rose more than expected in October, hitting a 10-year high in its first reading since Germany held national elections two weeks ago, a survey showed on Monday.

Japan's services sector expanded in September at the slowest rate in 11 months as the pace of new orders eased, though a raft of other data suggest the economic recovery remains intact even as momentum may have ebbed slightly in the third quarter.

Britain's statistics office said it made an error in its measure of growth in costs in the labor market, one of the pieces of data that the Bank of England is looking at closely as it considers whether to raise interest rates next month.

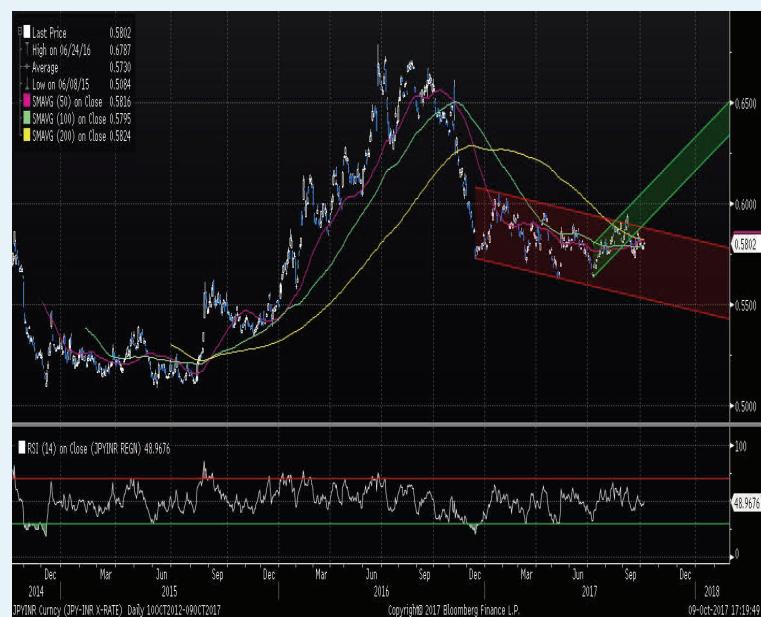

Activity in China's services sector grew at its slowest pace in 21 months in September as new orders cooled, a private survey showed, blurring the picture of how the economy is performing heading into a key Communist Party Congress.

The central bank threw a fresh lifeline to smaller firms last week in an attempt to redress that deep structural imbalance, offering an earnings booster to banks if they ramp up lending to more vulnerable sectors of the economy.
